The Final Curtain

Carigone politicians have always known the islands were neither independent, nor free, but played the scripted game with volumes of verve, freedom of immunity and colonial titles, therefore, never properly educated the people, did as they liked and lost the competition when they unintelligently outgrew their masters. The usual blindness associated with not caring about those who elect them, only focused on narrow self interests, but after recently running afoul of said masters have had their leashes reattached and tightened, these are the consequences. Naturally, some are using Youtube to regale us with rivers of tears since outdoing and finding themselves on the backburner. While others who we could not turn around without hearing their rotten rhetoric for seven long years, have gone eerily silent.

Did these same politicians ever instruct populations about the Monroe Doctrine, no? Of course they would not want it known, kept it secret and fed the public lies while weaponizing legislations of entrapment, making sure everyone remained confused and caged within the sinkhole depths of politics. Denying successive school age children permission to detailed Caribbean and Afrikan history to this day. Did these misleaders ever share the people's generated tax wealth with them for the past 40 years, no? Public funds were obviously divided between the local 1% of puffed up narcissistic political elite impersonators and their crook friends, generationally. Not one of them ever cared sufficiently about the Black Afrikan bodies, the majority populations who fund the islands with their presence, so this is the blowback for the self-named "World Boss" Gang. They finally FAFO.

Editorial

By Empress Wuarola Oya

The subject organization is a backward, nonprogressive self-serving opportunistic relic that erroneously believed petty, small island politics deployed over many decades could ever reach the scale of world level geopolitics and got a harsh shock in return. After all the gimmicks, role playing and selling out the population's opportunities and birthright for self gain. Those overused, fossilized practices were not nearly enough to help a foray into big boy and big girl worldstage politics, especially knowing what they all do behind the scenes, so their stumble and free fall were guaranteed. The end result of becoming expert copiers, and not genuine leaders.

It is one thing to play checkers and always win against the helpless, get away and laugh all the way to the bank with the aid of manipulated, tricked out legal systems; but quite another when chess is played and you finally find yourself at the losing end when things get real, shattering the mirrors made of smoke. A real world upset to those who can no longer weasel out. What is the use of paying for these awful outcomes from the taxpayer chest. Why not hire consultants directly to manage economies efficiently for a change, effectively cut out the middleman/woman and when contracted consultants do not perform as hired, fire them, no pension necessary, no additional perks for the greedy. At least employees will know not to step outside of their job descriptions, know their boundaries, a line politicians seem not aware they should never cross. The current arrangement is unacceptable and has become unbearable when the road to parliaments is treated as a get-rich-quick stratagem, well armed with and using the art of bully politics.

Once elected, island management immediately hires high-end consultants at tens of millions of tax dollars, because they are still on a honeymoon high, and obviously suddenly too important to work as employees/civil servants, then proceed to make the highly lucrative two-way scheme permanent. If they cannot perform important government tasks despite being in parliaments for 30 and 40 years, despite a retinue made up of thousands of civil servants, then they should just say so from the start, instead of bragging pre-election what they can and will do, then do nothing post-election. When a country has the highest GDP @140 and the most astronomical debt in the Caribbean like Barbados. The island is faced with more poverty, no positive way forward likely as everything is reduced to frightening proportions. Six generations cannot repay the obligations owed, as more borrowing is vital in each interim. A total irreversible disaster brought on by incompetent administration masquerading as governance.

'TEK DE VISA'

As pomposity grows in leaps and bounds, with players deciding they have become larger than the islands they are handsomely rewarded to serve. The fallout is massive, the people are always the ones to feel a negative impact. Students need visas to study, the lack of opportunities from before the 1970s and thereafter, resulted in immigration to countries requiring work permits and business visas. These countries, once goaded by the overconfident, can retaliate with devastating backlash, as many people have families they visit annually, no one wants to be told visits to grandchildren are restricted. Less importantly, many people shop in bigger countries as imports to islands are mostly mediocre in quality, so there goes the convenience.

None of the involved governments can say they were bluffing or did not mean it when they blurted out "Tek de Visa," at the US representative, or claim not knowing there are diplomatic channels to express individual or collective grievances, and doing so via social media videos as a pack mentality first response, broke established protocols that bind them. All this stupidity was created and carried out without their individual population's consent. This performance of gaslighting and playing to Youtube audiences that "Tek de Visa" was a direct challenge, backfired. Since then, one island has finally rid itself of its resident parasite after 24 years, post his joint starring debut. Other islands are left to face the music alone, with no plan B in place to do better by the people whom they never factor into their self centred, grandiose agendas. Especially after wasting every opportunity because all became ravenously fame hungry.

When in rotation, political parties have never had the ability to produce mass viable alternatives, or long term employment of any kind for the smallest or largest populations found in any of the islets, within the last sixty years. However, everything they touch comes with a stench amid provable accusations of corruption. Everyone is now left to suffer the ongoing reverberations and pick up the pieces after the politician's little "let us provoke" America stunt. All countries have their varying levels of terrorist activities, but not many noticed when island management added their own brand. We therefore need to zero in on these overly eager individuals, no matter their contrived status as titled angels. There is absolutely no benefit to populations whose concerns they pointedly ignore, and definitely operate way outside the purview of taxpayer funded assignments. Had any of the prancing politicians had one iota of commonsense, the brainwidth to do better for anyone other than themselves, along with convincing extraordinary management skills, populations would not need to leave these shores seeking livable wages and at the mercy of bigger countries.

A State v. A Nation

A short youtube video by young Afrikan Kabala, titled: "the difference between a state and a nation," finally outlines how populations have been deceived generationally and their lives wasted unnecessarily believing anything these sorry excuses for overseers say. All they do is role play, meme theatrics, and do the bare minimum, but wreak havoc at a grand expanse.

Thomas Sankara saw them for exactly who they are, " little servants" of the colonial system.

Abandon it - Bob Marley, that was his rallying cry to keep the system of things at bay. We have come to learn they only pay attention to the state where the treasury, vat and pension fund can be found, and wilfully neglect the nation.

Those thus attached have run their course, only chaos will ensue the longer they hang around, unless and until there is a mammoth overhaul. Since they pledged allegiance to the State that owns them, never to the Nation of people who elect them, refused to change that pecking order, but ensure they are enriched magnificently for their acting skills, by any means necessary, and now they are the smirking owners of tens of thousands of political slave minds, easy pickings, easy wins.

However, they never anticipated heavy resistance and pushback from the few who saw every foul move made, and refused to allow them to get away with the final insult of presiding over a brutal intercontinental dictatorship. Although determined to take full control of millions of weak minds in the Caribbean and across continents through acting out deceits, but, that too unraveled under consistent intense pressure and the current unforeseen turn of events, they could not predict or control. The focused goal and commitment uncovered was taking authority over this region and the continent of Afrika using the only lifestyle they know, to create a global criminal syndicate with the current capitalist and socialist systems as married driving forces, with them as head and well masked by hollow speeches.

While partnered with countries just like themselves, who never treat dark skin populations with any respect and delegate them to the very bottom of the socio-economic order as dictated by present systems; and also dedicatedly supported and enabled by an entourage of local empty-headed sheeple followers. With no schematics in place for ascendants in any island to individually access their Afrikan birthright as entitled. Everyone was cast aside despite the time available in the last twenty years to reconnect them to ancestral lands. But that uncaring ambition is now stripped and shut down, since none of the elaborate sham will ever benefit either continent of Afrikan peoples, and carried dire repercussions had there been a successful roll out. Meddlers

Some political agents actually promoted themselves as meddlers in the affairs of other countries, but only for political parties for whom they have a personal preference, for whatever payment was derived. Right up until things went sideways when a new government with the same policies went into the Whitehouse, but whom they are not aligned with, took over. However, also meddling in other islands to change governments or lure, attempt to coerce people into voting a particular way outside of their moral desires, is disrespectfully tasteless to say the least. St. Vincent voters were rightfully livid at the affront, intrusion and gave a well deserved rebuke to the Barbados culprits. One can only ascertain that the illusion of celebrity went to their heads and blinded judgment. The only explanation for persuading themselves of an untouchable, powerful invincibility beyond any measure, confirming that they are the problem, since no one knows which side they are truly on, or for whom they really work.

Clearly, there was some mixup in convincingly projecting they are in charge of an entire region of peoples who never elected them, employing a not quite there, unsuccessful attempt to oversee economies just as they do in their tiny domain. While comically mamaguying a large portion of the 44 million inhabitants of the archipelago, but without the skill sets needed to triumph and with too much heavy baggage to go the distance, and as suitably described, with utter incompetence, lack of accountability, sketchy deals, suppression of populations, rampaging through treasuries for self-enrichment, no advancement across the board for taxpayers, questionable diplomacy, nonexistent pedigree, thug-like finesse and on and on. A technique inviting mutually assured destruction .

Thankfully, the hallucination has finally vaporized. We are witnessing the end of a coup by upstarts before it begins, for which the people of the Caribbean never asked, had no clue and are now mercifully spared. Everyone must pay rapt attention and remain vigilant at all times for conniving tricks endangering lives, wellbeing, survival and quality of life of the entire region, once politicians remain on the loose. Amen Ra.

An Excellent Expert Detailed Analysis

A recent Youtube video titled "After Maduro, Who's Next? 3 Caribbean Caribbean Nations in Danger" by Ruminations News Network, offers insight and explains in full detail the futility and jeopardy syndicated with affiliating oneself with caricatures for leaders who can claim full responsibility for the current conditions, political climate and fallout enveloping the area.

For many years, warnings abounded about the mental laziness and inertia populations reduced themselves to over decades by relying solely on and listening only to disengaged, self-absorbed, destructive politicians with their socio-fiscal devaluation of entire parliaments and societies. We are only now witnessing the long term manifestations of those grave errors.

As young people who knew very little due to miseducation back then, one thing was understood, we lived in a world of delusions, despite all the missing information over the last half century, that was very clear. When we tried to articulate and verbalize those concerns we were ostracized by government pimps/minions, still are by the dumbed down who sit comfortably frozen in a braindead position, with delighted politicians dictating what they do, say and think, while they remain happily and obliviously unfazed. The reason we are saddled with a multitude of so-called educated people, who lack basic vital analytical and critical thinking skills. So in minds like mine, the little island management in this region qualify for exactly what they are getting, are deservingly due for much more because of their dripping greed, constant lying and refusal to stop the shell game against vulnerable populations who pay them.

I personally have sympathy for the helpless populations who still do not know a quarter of what they should. Especially with each incoming generation who are promptly misled into a degenerate world of dirty politics, with all crucial knowledge deliberately withheld/hidden by political parasites, these are the vulnerable for whom one feels empathy.

When Enlightenment in the Young is Inflamed

Young people want answers, after coming to the realization they do not have the whole story, and are looking to the elders, but have to come to grips with the fact, the real villains reside in the parliaments, most are long gone after haunting those precincts far longer than they should, but too many still remain who paralyze progress.

We are now charged with the role of alerting our youngsters that gangs of politicians who did not think the people deserved certain knowledge and selfishly kept statistical details to themselves, to look good in their master's eyes, thereby securing low level positions cyclically, caused these gaps of miscommunication.

Despite all the recent world stage hoopla and long speeches by some, it was all showboating, designed to distract. They too refuse to end the disingenuous charades and do their jobs as paid servants. Therefore causing an epidemic and deficit in comprehension of happenings over the last 60 years, across regional populations. Now we witness where the cloaked disguise that parliament dwellers are all-powerful has landed them, right back where they started in 1951.

The onus is now on the young to catch up after those lost decades because of stupid people who knew they were doing populations a terrible injustice but too ego driven and arrogant to stop. At this time, it makes perfect sense to do what is necessary to catch up on Caribbean and Afrikan history, break the cycle, uproot the deleterious precedents set by reckless politicians. Information is all over the internet, easily accessible, to use wisely.

Karma Catches Up

Our Black Afrikan people never seem to learn and are always blinded by worthless smooth talkers who lack substance and shamelessly incessantly run off at the mouth as practiced chronic liars. The reason many who know no better remain trapped in slave like conditions and at risk of losing their lives by the millions, because they comfortably believe misleaders. Just because a woman can play several simultaneous characters does not make her trustworthy, it makes her extremely nefarious, especially when the revelation of real intent is an insatiable thirst for fame, a gluttony to possess billions of dollars, particularly when it does not belong to them, regardless of however it is attained, coupled with a nauseous need for world attention, adoration, even if they have to step on and over taxpayers to use state funds and buy global awards to project imaginary power and influence. All the while, trying every trick to rig an election.

When one works for four or five different masters with all the accompanying conflicts of interest, one is forced to speak in an equal amount of different voices. When decades of dangerously illicit dealings have finally caught up and are in the public sphere, one must navigate the self engineered minefields or step on their own explosive devices. Barbados became the poster child for when Karma catches up with bad actors. Amun Ra
