Ancient Kush and Kemet Revisited - While The Small Island

Remains On A Con Game

By Empress Wuraola Oya

"restitution of cultural property and heritage, decolonisation...."

We now know enough to revisit our ancient spaces and thoroughly break down any points of plan, examine it to its lowest element, that can potentially negatively impact the future of our offspring, due to who is presenting these proposals without our input or approval. As the main contributor to certain tyranny unleashed on our most recent ancestors, do not know our scripts, as ancestrally created, and are never to find out certain things. I would be wary they lead this charge of paper presentation while still keeping us away from other knowledge about our heritage. The bajan fraud must be debunked, they are obsessively determined to turn Afrika into an eternal crime scene using the diplomatic franchise to fill their pockets, putting everyone in extreme danger, the one and only goal.

When you can only think in fragmented absolutes with no deep seated critical thinking skills, which is, either "pursue reparations or abandon it," seen as the only option, with no other solutions, and with not enough leverage to balance the situation, the entire, much bigger picture is completely missed. During the hunt for what is not theirs, they honestly believe everything is still hidden from us, and are yet to find out they are the ones at a distinct disadvantage where previously they lorded what they knew over us, with great delight and we knew nothing. They are now in the position where there ain't no fun when the rabbit is much better educationally equipped and intellectually armed.

Our ancient ancestors from Kush were very precise. It is obvious the new plot is to suggest de-colonization, make it look good so the public believe they are actually doing something, pure trickery, will never happen, not by their hands; but in the grand scheme of things, the current strategy is to replace old colonizers with themselves, same concept, no modifications whatsoever, and no one notices because they do not know our complete story. We are well aware how de-colonization works, and this flimflam, con game compiled by the rush and hurry, is far removed from the process. This is merely shifting the onus, so should something go wrong blame, you guessed it, their masters.

Unless parliaments individually decolonize thoroughly, it is not happening on its own, neither are colonizers obliged to remove anything that others can and should do themselves. The contents of this paper seems like begging masters to help them decolonize, a nonstarter. We also know that the original bloodlines from the ancient Afrikan worlds are now in sync as they should be, unbeknownst to the big planners. Therefore, none of these shenanigans hastily thrown together will pass the smell test.

Ancient Kush and Kemet Revisited - While The Small Island Remains On A Con Game

Just to refresh memories, although we are well aware most of the Afrikan descended population in this region do not know and were never given the correct Afrikan story. Dr. Cheikh Anta Diop and Dr. Theophile Obenga, brilliant esteemed scholars were able to disconnect the lies. Since then, over many decades, bloodlines directly linked to the ancient worlds of Kush and Kemet, many from the diaspora, tried to get ancestral relief from descendants of invading colonizers, occupiers and were met with prison, harassment and terror. While those original bloodlines who survived the millennia of holocaust, still on ancient lands are treated like they are invisible and second class to everyone else, sounds familiar?:

Dr. Cheikh Anta Diop: The African Origin of Civilization Explained

Amazingly those individuals who have taken a sudden interest are quietly accessing the situation remotely, no doubt invited by the "I want money," crew who are looking to get paid. At some point they will learn that joining with the local vipers to once again trap the authentic ancient Kushite and Kemetyu lineage within more colonial lies, this time as "brown shadows," hoping to displace their masters, because they know why, is a really bad idea:

We should also ask them, since we do have that right, how much are they paying handicapped black traitors these days? The problem facing everyone, they know not that they know not, just like their collaborators. Will not succeed this time and neither will the conspiratorial quisling.

Ancient Kush and Kemet Revisited - While The Small Island Remains On A Con Game

"law and justice"

Every law from the 1st physical world century whether AD or BCE, within the last six to seven thousand years of pillage, falls under the rubric of colonial laws, anymore created by identical means, same predicament: and given all the devastation caused over epochs are now and in the future null and void. Apparently, they think no one noticed they no longer recognize or observe election laws, voter's rights, or the Judge's decision handed down on electoral fraud that was blatantly ignored by Barbados' minority government. So why should anyone else accept laws everyone has stopped conforming to, no longer believe in, and are basically criminalizing jurisprudence that only apply to majority populations.

They have all long ago ignored local, regional and international human rights charters and declarations as they relate to Afrikan people, never accepted them. Therefore, the titled products and merchants of the ongoing nightmare cannot put forth any recommendations asking for new legal frameworks under the same retrograde system, simply because they want to retain a tight grip and solidify ownership of populations and the billions of dollars they generate. Further, they would not know how to build anything that will not mirror their master's output. Historical criminals and their minions should not configure anymore social or financial structures for Afrikan ascendants period, never should have started, and this has already been established and proven; in saying that, the targeted are responsible for removing themselves from such conspiracies:

"global governance reforms...."

If truth be told, except for those who know no better, no one wants the same ineffective, incompetent, inability to adequately or impressively produce, singularly create acceptable change, major advancements; and generally incapable of adding value and improvements to colonial damaged lives, not even in the areas of real education or critical healthcare. Incompetence now masquerades as future spectres. If they cannot do it under current conditions, have not been able to in the last thirty years, they never will; that also goes for all the other words used that basically means retaining the same philosophy, pretending to be new faces, but exercising the same old methodology.

You are the Spirit

Yes, you were born of the elements

But we must realize that our home is far beyond this Earth

Due to how they were schooled and know nothing else, those are not real leaders, they are mimic masters. No one wants globally trained parasites, who are not ancestrally blessed, carrying our grands and great grands into another sinkhole of corruption, death, thefts, destruction, and leaving it as an uglier legacy when all of it can be avoided by those who are vigilant.

"diaspora engagement, citizenship and right of return....."

"multi-generational and inter-generational dimension."

All citizenship as it stands on the continent is colonial in every aspect, none are Afrikan ancestrally driven. It is insulting to tack it on last as an afterthought, and I am sure will never address the foundational, and fundamental weaknesses that has built up over its period of existence. Given what is currently happening in South Afrika, the degradation is difficult to miss. This includes occurrences in the Caribbean where islands perceived as selling passports to foreign criminals are completely deleted from accessing visas to the US, as are many Afrikan countries for varying reasons. This significantly changes the entire demographics, as things escalate, and drastically highlights the colonial theme:

In addition, direct engagement with Afrikan ascendants in the Caribbean was never sought by Afrikan presidents the correct way, I also touched on that topic several times. Since the years of access to genetic testing giving us entry to the world of ancestry. Personally I would much rather my genealogical link be recognized as primary, giving a more acceptable entrance to our Afrikan space and extended family.

Once colonial politicians are involved, this will go nowhere, they cannot speak for us, are not qualified and due to their long standing indifference to our very existence and Afrikan heritage, are not wanted. We reserve the right to reject all guiles and wiles of master-dependent politicians. No one who has more than a modicum of self-respect wants the stain or stench of slavehood attached when interacting with bloodline cousins through local grade wannabe slave masters and the absolute worse possible influences occupying slaver parliaments.

This is clearly a private familial situation, reconnecting to previously lost bloodlines, from where known dangerous western marionettes should be banned completely. As I have posted more than once, my bloodline runs through nearly half the Afrikan continent, meaning I am cousin to at least 600,000,000 people, (Six Hundred Million), so exactly what would Caribbean politicians be doing involved in that scenario. I am not related to them, neither am I their property. This is a very sensitive issue and respect must be shown, those calling themselves leaders cannot just barge their way through and make inappropriate decisions.

How dare these bullies believe they can encroach on, take control of, or manipulate familial connections. My lineage is not owned by the Slaverbados parliament led by criminals, and I challenge them to say otherwise. They were warned repeatedly to stay out of our ancestry because of who they are and what they do, nothing good can come from their interference, particularly to the wellbeing of incoming Afrikan generations.

I am equally positive some people would much prefer ownership by colonial beings constantly meddling in every aspect of their lives, a personal choice, but we choose freedom away from those who still seek to permanently keep our minds in chains for their personal aggrandizement, and vicious egos.

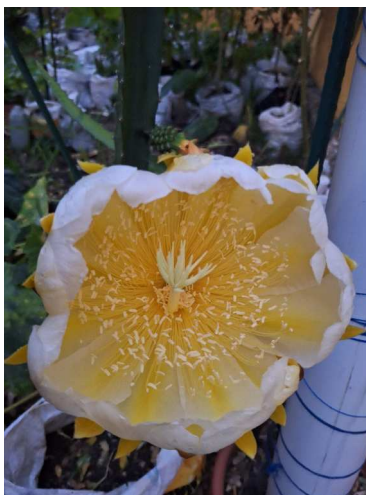

Ancient Kush and Kemet Revisited - While The Small Island Remains On A Con Game

" education, knowledge and cultural renewal, truth, documentation and public memory...."

This seems like a lot of feel good words hastily compiled without final analysis or deep thought, I am sure it will be expanded on but still missing crucial details. The colonial schooled are definitely struggling to present credible evidence of ancestral education going back at least 30 thousand years. Including the clearly omitted Afrikan languages not widely distributed in the last 100 years, especially none at all to schools in the Caribbean. They will certainly not get very far just skimming the surface as the barren and empty.

Dragon fruit flower

"transforming global economic and development architecture....."

"debt relief and financial justice....."

How about building from the ground up first, and more people participating, instead of a few minorities seen as above the law and everything else, allowed to do what they want, enjoy the benefits rightfully belonging to the majority, the status and class folly. While government borrows huge amounts to cover the deficits caused and boast about overnight wealth, then nothing trickles down. Top down schemes are now notorious as unworkable in this new environment. Since money disappears like clockwork from the treasury, vat and pension fund into someone's bottomless pit. While having to repay lenders and currently borrowing at higher rates to repay lower ones.

Right now colonial politicians owe Afrikan ascendants who voted for them and pay them liveable salaries with perks for the last 74 years, due to the billions removed from economies over decades, with no accountability. How about returning all that money, and paying reparations, start the ball rolling, build and earn some credibility. Populations are rightly sick of the thievery that leaves them in generational poverty. Start there, that would be the beginning of reparatory justice, instead of preaching at others, when you are merely their carbon copy.

Ancient Kush and Kemet Revisited - While The Small Island Remains On A Con Game

"global reparations fund, corporate accountability and business responsibility....."

These flights of fancy come from those who still manage slave societies, that concept is so rich, but always on the lookout for a free fund to raid; and have no business acumen outside of the next racket. They manage to fail at everything that could bring about upward mobility for populations, but suddenly convince themselves they are geniuses who can take over everything just to crash and burn, as is the norm. Although beseeched to provide financial reports for decades from taxpayer funded departments, so the people can see how their money is spent, the refusal still resonates. Their irresponsibility is well defined and aggravating to those who pay them salaries.

Populations are much better off choosing those amongst themselves who are not hungry for celebrity fame and global notoriety, but actually down-to-earth, and respectful of ancestry. While knowing their place as servants of the people and not their masters; not uppity, greed-filled politicians looking to score souls. Every corporate hole is known as filled with those only interested in leeching off the public, always on public welfare, can never sustain themselves independently. Scroungers living freely off Black lives while exploiting and oppressing. There is nothing uplifting here, it is clear this is an overreach to continue uninterrupted.

"technology innovation and capacity building....."

Fancy words but when it comes to application/implementation, abject failures, nothing works.

"public health and well-being, gender justice, climate justice...."

This from people who do not supply the first two, and use the last two as props, the latest fad.

"spiritual, psychological rehabilitation and social healing..."

Do they even know what they are speaking about here, except for looking to present a big bill to get money in their hands. When this could have been handled using the billions that disappeared from the economy over the many decades. Now they are hot and sweaty for a money grab, shameless.

Unimpressive
