Afrikan Education - Decolonizing the Afrikan Mind

Pivoting And Pointing Fingers Is The New Political Dance

INVOCATION:

"I greet you spirits of my ancestors; I greet you spirit guides, friends of the invisible.

You that see without looking, you that know without learning, I come to tell you I am about to go on a journey.

How can a blind man travel? My feet can't hold me, my eyes can't show me the way, my wit can't guide me through traps.

So I come to give myself away to you, that you may be my feet, my eyes and my wit;

That I may see through you, that I may walk with you, that I may feel you.

For it is with you that this journey can happen as a journey, May it be safe."

Afrikan Education - Decolonizing the Afrikan Mind
By Empress Wuraola Oya

There is still a misinterpretation, misconception between ancient ancestral education and the more recent colonial schooling. The one has nothing to do with the other, as proven by those with accession to both, and living testimony suggests a distinct difference. Since the latter has materialized, it is handy and very useful to combine with the primary that existed hundreds of thousands of years prior, before any other.

In the midst of numerous epochs of an illusionary world, tens of thousands of Afrikan centered minds have spectacularly self-decolonized. Those lineages who remained thus connected were able to evolve to stages previously unknown, and unheard of before, while on decades-long journeys. This process started during the demonization of Black conscious individuals by puppet politicians and their underlings. Hence a now confused state at being left out, and three life cycles behind where they will permanently remain, wandering, stumbling around warbling out of sync. With everything they touch turning messy. They must come to the stark realization no one needed them then and still do not ever.

Since de-colonization only just occurred to the bajan colonial schooled on July 14, 2026, hopefully they are not sitting around waiting for their masters to enact a mass de-colonization program, there is no such thing. Especially when it is not the responsibility of bigger countries to counteract, heal the mental mutilation of the people, for which politicians, and their ill-schooled satellites are equally guilty. No one was waiting for the colonial clad to suddenly get a light bulb moment and now once again misleading the Caribbean trying to retain a foothold. In our ancient world, where they have no standing or voice to start or continue the charade, will never be taken seriously, let alone misdirect anyone who knows much better.

Afrikan Education - Decolonizing the Afrikan Mind

That level of carelessness would certainly add to the well defined oxymoron of demanding reparations while an employee of said masters and intending to stay in the same fixed paid situation, with titles, perks, awards and everything colonial still firmly locked in place. A destructive conflict of interest with no premium changes. If you are not equipped to lead by example, why mention it at all, knowing the whole system is still heavily weaponized against Afrikan people on small island states, deliberately so, and recognized as "the most colonized region on earth," by those who fuel the system, keeping it supercharged alive and well: so why continue operating within that rigged space, and started using the thought of decolonization as a stage prop only, just because it sounded like another good idea to throw out as bait, but will certainly flop, if not carried to its logical conclusion.

Instead of a road show and balancing act, demolish all things colonial that presents as detrimental to the people, walk the talk. There can be no half-measures, or sneaking around with counterproductive ulterior simulations.

What could possibly be driving politicians who say one thing, do another and reverse positions as the wind blows. If you are not prepared to remove your 1661 Slave Codes, without asking Massa's permission, why are you even in the conversation, lecturing and castigating. Hype alone does not hold water.

The only thing needed is repealing every degrading colonial law on the statute books, which would take much less time than it does to legislate crimes against the population, and create bogus nonexistent laws to silence them with fear of imprisonment and heavy fines, in exchange for monetary gain. Otherwise, people would rightfully believe there are more insidious pretexts afoot:

Rwanda successfully removed colonial codes seven years ago. we await Barbados doing the same:

Decolonization of the Legal Code: The End of Colonial Laws in Rwanda and a Model for Other Post-Colonial Societies

May 14, 2021

By: Agnes Binagwaho and Richard Freeman[*]Namely on July 15, 2019, the Parliament historically proclaimed an end to all colonial laws:

"All legal instruments, brought into force before the date of independence of Rwanda, are repealed. [3]

More fertile minds would recognize they are the ones in direct control of the day-to-day management of the legislature, which is not only available or reign solely to legislate crimes against the Afrikan population. Along with everything else positive taxpayers/electorate hired politicians as employees to perform, if they are not an illegitimate government, and in so doing are the ones to remove all remnants of colonization, uproot it from the society completely. Specifically and including all curricula not conducive to the development of Afrikan progress.

Starting in the primary schools where young minds are generally either shaped ancestrally or distorted, altered and damaged irreparably by everyone else's warped sense of what Afrikan children should know; and what is to remain hidden, as has happened on the island to its young for far too long, a multiplicity of decades. So, if the global finger pointers and complainers are not ready to do their jobs, what is the point of making accusations without action? This is disturbing that we have to question all motives of those visibly sweating while in hot pursuit of their own agendas.

Afrikan Education - Decolonizing the Afrikan Mind

The Black Secret Project as posted, and many others have been around for dozens of years, some for multiple lifetimes, competently educating those so inclined in the ways of our ancient Afrikan ancestors, it is nothing new, has been accessible for adequate lengths: and yet we saw no effort from those ambitiously seeking to establish themselves as slave traders out of Afrika, seeing Afrikans as numbers, Black bodies to multiply by dollars. On the one hand, believing what they are really doing is well concealed. While on the other hand, simultaneously performing an exceptionally weak, transparent colonial activist role, another non-existent parody, yet seeking reparations that makes no sense. May we tell Afrika again, for the greedy bajan, it is an extremely short jump from lying and luring heavily pregnant Afrikan women and others, to cross the Atlantic under false pretenses, to organ harvesting. The historically and materialistically covetous are not in the least bit concerned where the money comes from, once it arrives by the millions to fund their fraudulent lifestyles.

Simply because they do as trained, whole-heartedly convinced they are cutting in line, and as usual making it up as they go along, the famous, fake it to make it during all the scandalous reveals; it is silly, even symbolically, and heavily underscores the deficiencies in the colonial mis/under education. Again, they are the wrong people, refuse to accept that, and consistently spew rubbish everywhere, imposing uneducated nonsense on populations, will never change but serves to compound the out of place lineup.

Pivoting And Pointing Fingers Is The New Political Dance

Since this has now become the case, we have to keep things very real. International treaties, declarations and charters are what small power junkies also need to face for episodes of Elder Abuse and Violations of Elder Rights, if only someone would get that ball rolling. The Charter exists, it is just to do the research and find competent lawyers who are not government stooges:

San Jose Charter on the Rights of Older Persons in Latin America and the Caribbean:

"(11 May 2012) More than 150 representatives of the member States of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) adopted today, in Costa Rica, the San José Charter on the rights of older persons.

Pivoting And Pointing Fingers Is The New Political Dance

The document is the final outcome of the Third Regional Intergovernmental Conference on Ageing in Latin America and the Caribbean, held from 8-11 May in the capital of Costa Rica, organized by the Government of the country and ECLAC.

In the San José Charter, government representatives also reaffirmed their commitment expressed in the Brasilia Declaration to spare no effort to promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all older persons, to work to eradicate all forms of discrimination and violence and to create networks for the protection of older persons with a view to the effective exercise of their rights.

Together with supporting the work of the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing and the Working Group of the Organization of American States, delegates urged considering the feasibility of both an international and an inter-American convention on the rights of older persons and the possibility to appoint a special rapporteur responsible for the promotion and protection of the human rights of this age group.

Likewise, they committed to strengthening the protection of the rights of older persons by means of a differentiated and preferential treatment, as well as the endorsement of special protection laws, priority attention to older persons in administrative and judicial procedures, and in benefits provided by the State.

They will also seek to make public policies and programmes designed to raise awareness of the rights of older persons and their participation in civil society organizations and in councils."

*"Social services

(o) Create and guarantee the necessary social services to provide care for older persons taking into account their specific characteristics and needs and to promote their independence, autonomy and dignity;"

Pivoting And Pointing Fingers Is The New Political Dance

Once the culprits continue to get away with violations and escape accountability, as they have since the 1920s, that nightmare for the elderly will never end. They have proven their criminal vileness for lengthy periods and are efficiently capable. Therefore, just like the outlined initiative, immediate action is warranted.

A Petition To The IACHR, Arguing That Barbados Is In Violation Of The American Convention On Human Rights: is just the beginning:

Amnesty International is also available with guidelines for those whose life and freedom are at risk from political torture, violations/persecutions.

Colonial schooled politicians have wasted so much time, Black lives, and very likely will squander any more with distractions and still remain in the same spot to the bitter end, generating nothing of great significance or value for anyone but themselves, immovable. Unless the population who carry simple commonsense leaves them right there and moves on to much better, they too will become permanently bogged down in a decayed swamp of sinking quicksand.

"Be not arrogant because of your knowledge. Take up counsel with the ignorant as well as with the wise, for the limits of knowledge in any field have never been set and no one has ever reached them.

Wisdom is rarer than emeralds and yet is found among the women who gather at the grindstones."
