Black Descendants Of Long Gone Slavers Using Reparations As Cover

Constitutional Bondage

SPIRITUALITY IS WAITING

If you are a Konsense part of it, smile back at the ancestors

The evening sunset is soft in its nakedness

I celebrate the anniversary of each new breath...As the NTCHRU fills me with Divine Spirit

Black Descendants Of Long Gone Slavers Using Reparations As Cover

By Empress Wuraola Oya

When we thought they could go no lower, revelations proved otherwise. Somehow the worst possible misleaders believe they are owed something for their literally decades of injustices against Afrikan humanity, and plan to collect, regardless of outcomes, or use it indefinitely to prolong a narrative. Even though it is only a dream. Nothing felt or sounded right since the concept floated into the Caribbean. The falsity coming out of the yawning caverns in their faces, and unable to tell the truth became a red flag. However, they are fooling very few. No one with functioning brain cells trusts them, since the enlightened have never had any good reason.

Our story details extended trails of treachery and the same phantoms keep reappearing, are out of alignment in this era, eternally bound to a space that has already shifted, due to the inescapable disgraceful activities and sinfulness of their ancestors. They are unable to break free, and are lying in wait for other generations to haunt. In the meantime working overtime to ensnare everyone into misery that has appeared on the horizon. Within which there is no escape for them or those attached. This has happened on a loop for hundreds of years.

They can pontificate and puppetize to their heart's desire, it changes nothing. Since the stain on the earth they have become is no longer to remain hidden. That is what they depend on, invisibility to operate undetected, cloaked in dishonesty, but not this time, they ran out of road. No matter how the rhetoric is repurposed, twisted and repositioned, the monster must face those who have been patiently waiting. This is not isolated, and spans both continents. The frenzy is no longer inexplicable, the abandoning of laws they oversee in the Caribbean to issue in more contemptable versions was as expected. The masks have fallen off completely, and carrying the most putrid sycophants on board explains everything. We outlived the threats for secrecy, the strong arming to instill fear, had there been righteousness involved, instead of a hateful need to strip our dignity using intimidation, there would have been a measure of success; but that approach has weakened significantly, and no longer works on the strongest minds. Complying with this type of tyranny is a personal choice.

Black Descendants Of Long Gone Slavers Using Reparations As Cover

There was concern from the very beginning, they are the wrong people, and now there is no doubt left whatsoever. This sense of ill fate persisted until one delves deep into the Elmira Castle, Gold/Slave Coast of Ghana, using ancestral guidance and finally seeing who we are really staring down. I was alerted to this some years ago, took it under advisement but preferred to see for myself, and it is even worse when proven. The ancient Afrikan Wagadu Empires extended throughout a much wider territory from which associated lineages derived, and has nothing to do with this modern day Ghana. That is the reason some cannot find any direct connections to ancient lines in that specific area. The discovery by many beside myself speaks volumes and will not be denied, since the manufactured group is driven by the same unnatural influences for a protracted period, that is detrimental to everyone.

Constitutional Bondage

We are supposed to believe that Afrikan leaders have no ability to remove colonial language from constitutions, still embedded but has naturally run its course, unless it has become wilful and used to prolong the further enslavement of populations. On the other hand, could it be, they do not want the people to find out that most are beholden to and still owned by the west; and therefore unwilling to use the same energies they are plugged into hounding down reparations, to abolish the odor of colonization. They are the ones, like those in this region who brag and boast about independence, but obviously the people are not yet unchained, still dependent and cannot access their rightful place.

After experiencing the same reckless movements from what can only be described as the epitome of pure menacing malice residing in parliaments, we recognize all the signs. There is absolutely no logical reason or excuse why these vehicles still exist throughout over four dozen countries in Afrika. How will they explain, if by some miracle we are yet to see, they get trillions in reparations but still use colonial constitutions. How do they justify or explain that paradox? One would think the baggage is first removed, and then liberation is achieved from under the dilapidated blighted tonnage that underscores permanency, but that is not what is happening here. The square peg, round hole technique is employed instead, which always ends in a backward trajectory.

Know Your History It Erases The Mystery - Professor James Smalls

Constitutional Bondage

The fact that Kwame Nkrumah left a readable blueprint that is still largely unused shows the contempt held for freeing the continent, and has all the hallmarks of, we will once again witness the inevitable. Although having previously known very little to nothing about Afrika, by design, we hope no one thought everyone would roll over and accept any and everything coming from the local parliaments in our region wrapped up in falsehoods. They are well known for vicious deeds, and most of us who value our lives and future generations, wish they would all disappear with the calamity they transport. With all the available evidence following them, except for maybe a few across the region. One would think they had the decency to remove themselves. The overall dislike is growing in leaps and bounds, as they have nothing worthwhile to offer the public despite the numerous parades and parties they so love to throw at taxpayer's expense.

I am not African because I was born in Africa, but because
Africa was born in me
- Kwame Nkrumah

It has become imperative that a deeper analysis of what is really happening in Afrika is warranted. How do governments go from ruthlessly pursuing reparations although knowing it is a complex issue because of the deep involvement of Afrikans in the kidnapping mayhem of the 1400-1800s and even before that in the Arab slavery genocide, which was central to making both a success: to becoming mildly tame to the point of fearful and childlike when it comes to removing the colonial laws and codes off statute books.

The disparity is outstanding, there must be an explanation. We were born and raised in the west for the last twenty generations. There were Africans already here, by virtue of ancestors circumnavigating the globe, populating and developing countries and islands for thousands of years: and given the current conditions of these environs that we now navigate. We also need to know why would something like this make sense, common or otherwise, to any of the Afrikan presidents to legislate into law, how is it possible:

Constitutional Bondage

Teen jailed for exam cheating in Guinea dies after sickle cell complications, father says

<https://share.google/hdvsWCaMFMQt99IMu>

We know the baccalaureate program well, it is nothing to die or go to prison for, no exam is, and will more likely than not be phased out in the future to something different. Therefore, I am curious to know, do these same governments go to such extremes to reinstate ancient Afrikan languages and real ancestral education in the schools on the continent. We know not everything was stolen by invaders and occupiers, some are still recoverable, so has any effort been made to distribute Afrikan education with the same degree of force.

I am sure the west with all its faults never once forced any government to legislate prison for children who may have cheated on tests, and even if they had, can you do the same to vulnerable youngsters in the west from your location. This gives us a closer look and insight into the inner workings of runaway legislatures.

In addition, Afrikan presidents are yet to address our birthright, or any claims we would have as independent minded, free ascendants. We are not interested in the little schemes put together with Caribbean politicians which now look like attempts to avoid the entire issue at hand by using an elaborate reparations journey to blanket everything which is very likely to collapse on itself from the sheer weight of deceptions alone, as UK and Europe ignore all of you, while we watch the artifice unfold. Victims are waiting for small island politicians to pay reparations to the people, they too owe for what they have done.

Would it not make better sense to find out what we are thinking before everything goes sideways? I am not speaking about slave minds, they are a special breed and quite comfortable where they reside under the thumbs of corrupt politicians, ecstatically happy in that locale, as they are so harmless and brain dead, all politicians love them. We are not going away, many acted like we do not exist and are moving full steam ahead like everyone must accept what Caribbean politicians do and say. Wrong, we never will. They already insulted our intelligence for far longer than necessary and due to their reputations, enduring scandals, and the dangers they represent, no one who is anyone listens to them anymore. They have become too toxic.

Constitutional Bondage

The longer this continues the more we know something insidious is afoot. Everything that happened so far points to collusion. Political players are famous for dragging everything into years and decades, stringing everyone along, until they are kicked to the curb by the electorate, or something else befalls them, as it suits varying agendas. Then nothing gets done, false promises for which they are eternally notorious, all remain broken. These days elections has become an exercise in rigging for some, making sure they are never removed. We heard the west say pointedly over and over again, they will pay no reparations, it now appears no one paid attention. Everyone seems deaf to those pronouncements, and forging ahead like they heard nothing said.

So unless Afrikan presidents and their Caribbean sidekicks got major leverage over the UK and Europe to retrieve the elusive trillions. We are talking about impenetrable advantage, that can seal a deal, no more questions asked, and prepared to use it. If they cannot, we believe they are hoodwinking populations for nefarious reasons. They cannot very well back down now, gone too far, and already said too much. So far, the only people I see paying dearly for whatever is going on between political players and their masters, are the people, as more pressure is applied, and threats made. With the potential for wasting lives as is normal for them. Embarking on this dreamscape without being the one in authority, holding the upperhand, is weird, some would say foolhardy.

Afrika has been at it for 30 years, most of them do not have another 30 years to continue, neither do most of the ones traversing Caricom and appear only to be buying time. They are mostly age 60 years and over, easy to wait them out. That is where putting your trust in politicians is never a benefit, and becomes a major liability. A short line of vision clouds the fact that populations will not keep them in parliaments based only on a promise of reparations. As government is a continuum, others can pick up where they left off. This still does not guarantee success, not now, as warned, and definitely not in 100 years, once the wrong people remain involved. However, it is beginning to seem that they are putting everything on hold and doing very little else. When much more can be achieved, if only they want to see beyond the grandiose plotting.

Constitutional Bondage

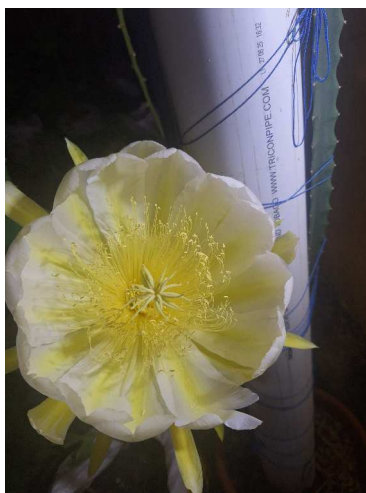

We have been saying for years, the local mouths act like someone promised them more time than they are allotted, and can just pick them up and use them at will. Wrong again. Much information is out there on the way politicians operate, from both divides. It was not needed before, but they seem to think no one knows what they do and the damage they manifest, or that it is all in writing.

Some years ago I was introduced to the historical ways that delays and time wasting are implemented. Apparently public servants perfected this, and now locked and ready to keep everyone stuck in the 2021 Covid scam, reparations delirium, and anything else they can conjure up like the 1960s era from where there will be no return, since they already seemed to have reached that port.

We have gotten warnings from every source who experienced multiple countries/continents including all the short comings. What we can ask, why is this still happening, and how will reparations change things?:

"Avoid People from Countries With a Culture Of:

- No civil rights;
- No women's rights;
- No children's rights;
- No worker's rights;
- No disability rights;
- No animal rights;
- Selling humans into slavery;
- Institutionalized rape;
- Institutionalized domestic violence;
- Casual prostitution;
- Female genital mutilation;
- Child brides;
- Ritual sacrifices (animals, children, people with albinism);
- Selling children to tourists for sex;
- Genocides into the tens of millions."

Constitutional Bondage

It is not that we do not know. From the moment Barbados acted like flies circulating raw sewage for the last eight years, the smut, the filth, right up their alley, and refused to do anything uplifting; we confirmed they fit right in the mess. Then went to the extreme with "baby plot" human trafficking: lied incessantly on Afrika with an advertising campaign, to promote a repugnant slave society in our region: and apparently those who should feel offended are just fine with that shamefulfulness, even though individual countries are degraded because of them.

We knew all the information sent to us years ago was accurate and can be published after holding off all this time. I believe in waiting to see if people realize that is not the only way. After doing things the same way for 530 years, over and over, and even before, but getting the same results, the true definition of madness. One would think they will try something different.

I read the anger in the information sent, now things have happened it hits home, the inability to accept decadent mindsets.

The same writer and many others were advocating to kick Afrikans out of America because of the recklessness of the leadership, and the attitudes while living in the US, that did not help the situation either. I took a wait and see attitude. I am sure the person is thrilled beyond measure it came to pass:

"In America, immigrants of African ancestry should not benefit from HBCUs, diversity programs, scholarships, social clout, political clout, ethnic identifiers, or set-asides for Foundational Black Americans. Immigrants of African ancestry have home countries where they have had centuries to build schools, create scholarships, etc. Haitian, Jamaican, and Nigerian scholarships are specifically for individual groups.

Black Americans should never share the scarce resources they have fought and died for in America. Instead, immigrants of African ancestry use their ancestry and fake Pan-Africanism to join the Congressional Black Caucus, NAACP, Urban League, etc."

Constitutional Bondage

Similarly, Caribbean islands cannot get upset when Black Americans have had enough of them as well. Since their leaders thought it would all last forever and refused to prepare, did not take adequate care of the population, kept playing party politics and yardfowl games. While they mismanaged the islands and did whatever they liked with the people's money until there is now nothing left. So apparently, all they can do is wallow in the grime and stink available which is decades behind, wedged in the 1960s when they already passed through that time lapse, and now the island is forced to revisit it again, right up until it smothers them. All the while, using reparations as a cover.

Just to be clear, this information was sent to me five, six years ago. I held on to it that long, trying to give Afrika a chance, but some people seem to prefer things as is, and clearly also showed us no respect as they found the political likeminded. What is happening now did not start yesterday. I do have my personal views on the term Afrikan American since we do live in the Americas and are of Afrikan descent, but personally I would not use it, never appealed to me:

"Fortunately, California and other states have begun to disaggregate and delineate Black American ancestry from African immigrants.

*Ethnic Identifiers: "Black American" and "African American" should be reserved for Black Americans. Immigrants of African Ancestry identify by West Indian, Caribbean, and Island names, African countries, African tribes, and the continent, Africa.

Therefore, using "Black American" and "African American" is thoughtless, disrespectful, exploitative, and opportunistic. American institutions created broad terms for the descendants of slaves, a people with multiple origins.

Demands

1. Stop the predatory overcharging of Black American tourists. Fees to visit slavery memorials (museums, slave castles, and "doors of no return") shall be exempt;"

Ma'at is Love

Follow your spirit to harmony

By listening to your eternal soul

The soul loves because it needs to be loved

Let your love bind your soul and spirit together as one

Your love of life as well as, the love of your life

As for the love of your life, let there be space in your togetherness

Even two great oak trees with roots as strong and as long as

Ourstory itself, cannot grow in each other's shadow

Let your love be like a never ending tide pulsating along the shore

of your eternal soul
