Open Invitations For Child/Human Traffickers From Afrika To Operate In Barbados And The Caribbean

By Empress Wuraola Oya

Afrika needs to clean up this chaos created by Barbados' PR machine on the continent, and ban its ambitious bajan "baby plot" which opened many doors for the most brutally reckless human traders, and others to operate in the Caribbean. Since the bajan title was designated a mouthpiece by the Afrikan Union for this region about a year or two ago, everything, including Black human life has demonstrably devalued in the most depraved ways. Therefore they too are also answerable for what is now unfolding, because of the perversions we know caused this spectacle. It is highly disturbing that the like-minded on the continent so eagerly embraced the dangerously corrupt from the west, and immediately put populations, especially women and children in jeopardy after admiring and condoning all the lies told to the public, with such thrill.

Therefore, AU presidents must be told, we do not want this or any other level of Afrikan slaver antics in our area targeting the unborn, just born, or other Black people in general. No lawsuit, unless pushed, needs to be filed against the Afrikan Union to bring such crimes to an immediate end, and prevent the start of, or continue the reverse from the Caribbean. Barbados' immigration was able to immediately access the law and apply it in this case. There is legislation on statute books against human trafficking everywhere as a deterrent, and to choke off these points of arrivals or departure. There is no excuse why this cannot be done, except for negligence.

Honestly, I do not appreciate having to straddle these two headlines barely 72 hours apart, "Interdicting And Violating The Judicial Rights Of Afrikan Caribbean People - Mirrors The Reparations Case In Namibia," to this new one, and have very little patience for either. When having to write about reparations seekers and their antithetical, inconsistent renderings.

Caricom opportunists will allow it to continue because that is who they are, always on the lookout to sellout, and will not once condemn these crimes against Black Afrikan humanity or advocate for the bajan mouth to be punished. They have no decency. No matter how the local government spokesperson tries to spin it, trafficking a new born Afrikan infant is not anything that occurred before videos magically appeared in the last few years in Nigeria and other countries. Where the smuggling, under the guise of tourism, of heavily pregnant Afrikan ladies was promoted, at their expense, based on lies. Convincingly selling Barbados as a place to give birth and obtain passports for wider diaspora travel.

Human trafficking does occur, Barbados is well known in UN reports, but relegated only to this area, that we know about. Rarely we hear about cross continent human trafficking, and definitely not of Afrikan babies. Usually it is females for brothel or private residence work out of Europe or Brazil. Sometimes we hear reports where children are kidnapped across the region and disappear, some turn up years later as adult prostitutes. We have had inexplicable experiences before, and only now able to put them into perspective and a proper context, because of what comes out from these despicable parliaments over generations. To prevent further deplorable abuses, Afrika needs to clamp down on the wild beasts from both sides of the Atlantic. We will not tolerate such crimes and violent abuses against Afrikan people triggered by your bajan mouth organ.

It was just a matter of time before the kidnappings started in Afrika, we will now have to see if it runs its course or escalates. The videos coaxing Afrikans off the continent definitely did the job. As far as we know, this young lady is the only one who was caught, but how many more managed to slip through using various other methods, is the question. They had five years to kidnap Afrikan women for breeding purposes to meet quotas, a well known crime in Afrika.

The criminal networks certainly had a wide open invitation issued to them by the headliner from this island, on video for the entire world to hear and see. There is no doubt this is a spinoff from the scheme the bajan players thought was so brilliant they were grinning from ear to ear at how much money they made over the short years. While wrapping the crimes up in newly packaged government issued names making it untouchable by the most evil, to date, undertaking to legally normalize trafficking. While anti-trafficking laws are on statute and usable : which is still garden variety human/baby trafficking by an additional name. No one has to accept new handles devised by black slavers to justify modern day slavery.

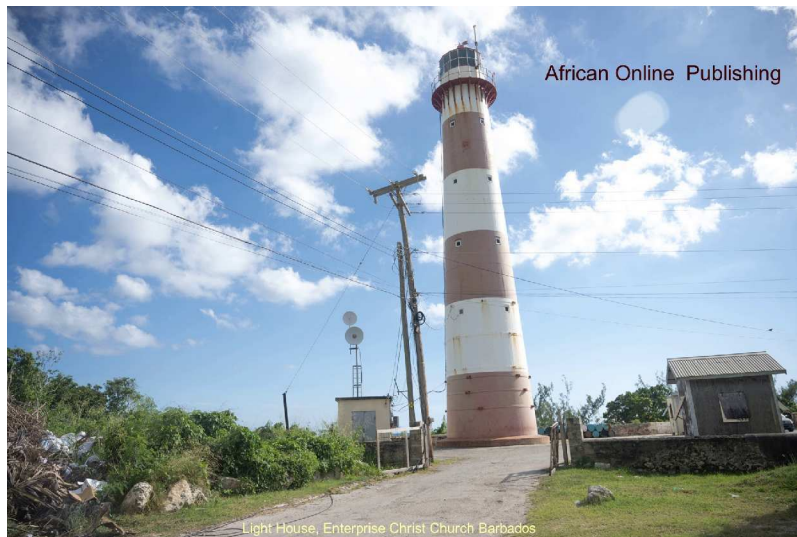

Both Nigeria and the Barbados government should be personally footing the bill for the female in Afrika to come reclaim her kidnapped infant, and for the test proving she is the parent. Trading in women and children in Nigeria is no secret, so I cannot for the life of me put my finger on why the bajan banner would choose that Afrikan country to seduce pregnant women to give birth in Barbados, using false advertising and elaborate promises that will never materialize. When commonsense tells us, doing so would attract every human trafficker operating within Nigeria's humongous radius, when word with visuals started circulating.

The Afrikan Union hosted and enabled Barbados in this noxious behavior, and should also be the ones paying for the mother to cross the Atlantic, with accommodation and her meals included. While waiting for DNA test results and making absolutely sure the young lady and baby are returned safely to Nigeria. Both sides know very well there are areas in Nigeria that are a cesspit of trafficking and other abominable human degradation. With every level of social decay available, yet still insisted on barging forward and creating all this havoc, although the incoming disaster was seen.

These are the consequences due to the recklessness and indifference shown by black governments for Afrikan lives. When upholding each other's crimes against Black humanity. I repeatedly asked both groups why were they seeking reparations when they are yet to clean up the stench of enslavement permeating both regions, post independence charade. Now I can boldly ask, have they no self-love, or self-respect? When the only ambition seems to be one of becoming the most vicious slavers of their own people with no apology offered.

No matter how the offenders try to distance themselves, or scrub and shower in an attempt to get clean from this stain, the blemish, and grime, nothing can wash it away on either side of the divide. Intelligence would tell the most simple of minds that activating deprived communities in Nigeria who survive on such activities, has a knock-on effect when fully aroused and tempted to expand operations.

Politicians did not care in the least, once the goal was achieved, ferrying people by plane to this region, and boasting how successful they were in connecting Afrika to the Caribbean. Then had the nerve to call that an achievement until it blew back on them. Well they sure did accomplish in every negative way conceivable, that anyone could have hoped for, if they are into these types of people destroying campaigns, and now it has gone completely out of control, contacting Interpol when they should all be in handcuffs. Open Invitations For Child/Human Traffickers From Afrika To Operate In Barbados And The Caribbean

Infant now in state custody

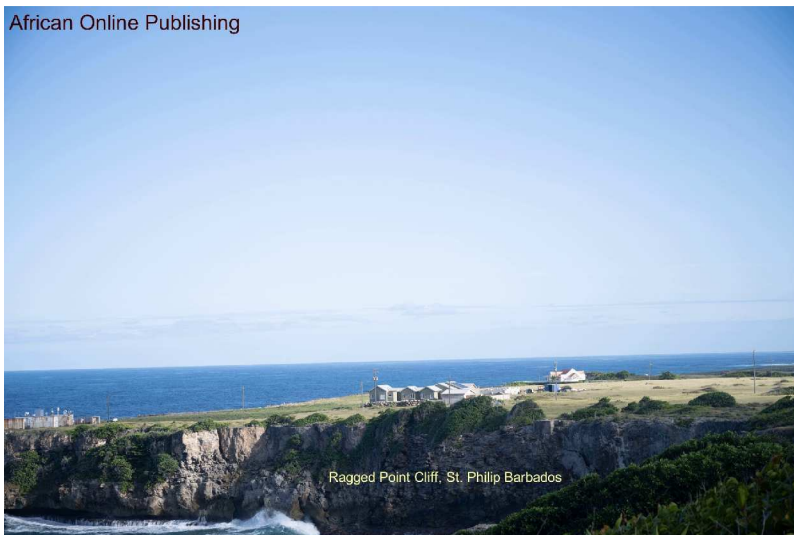

By Maria Bradshaw mariabradshaw@nationnews.com

August 28, 2026

A 28-year-old Nigerian woman has become the first person charged with child trafficking in Barbados after authorities intercepted an alleged smuggling operation involving a newborn baby girl. Hope Chioma Patrick, appeared before Magistrate Keitha Ellis at the District "D" Magistrates' Court yesterday. She was not allowed to plead to charges that on June 1 she trafficked in children and wilfully gave an untrue answer to an Immigration Officer. Patrick was remanded to Dodds Prison and is scheduled to return to court on September 24.

The infant at the centre of the case has been taken into state protective custody. Authorities suspect the child was destined to be sold on the black market in the United Kingdom (UK).

According to Saturday Sun investigations, Patrick arrived in Barbados on June 1 aboard an Air Peace flight from Nigeria, carrying the newborn. She told immigration officers she was in transit to the UK. She was questioned and subsequently cleared to enter the country.

However, days later, Patrick went to the Registration Department at the Supreme Court Complex and attempted to register the infant as a Barbadian citizen. When she failed to produce documentation proving the child was born on the island, a registration officer contacted the Immigration Department and she was subsequently taken into police custody.

Patrick was also unable to prove she was the child's mother and the baby was seized.

The woman was in police custody for the past two months, awaiting the results of DNA testing. Those tests confirmed she was not the biological mother of the infant.

The investigation took a new turn when a second Nigerian woman recently contacted Government offices inquiring about Patrick and the baby, stating she was the child's mother. Authorities said any woman wishing to claim the infant must travel to Barbados and submit to DNA testing.

Sources said Barbados has now contacted UK officials and Interpol regarding the case. In response, immigration officers have been placed on high alert and ordered to strictly scrutinise women travelling with babies.

This case highlights the illegal network known as the "Nigerian baby racket" or "baby factories". These are unauthorised facilities operating across Nigeria where traffickers target vulnerable, unmarried, or financially desperate young women. In these operations, infants are conceived and birthed to be sold on the black market. Women involved are either coerced by poverty into selling their babies, or abducted and forced into sexual slavery to produce children for the trade.

When contacted yesterday morning, hours before Patrick's court appearance, Minister of Home Affairs Gregory Nicholls told the Saturday Sun: "I can confirm that there is a matter under investigation. The Immigration Department has reported the matter and it is under investigation."

Nicholls said: "The laying of charges in this matter represents the robust efforts of our Immigration Department who proffered the information for the charges and the relentless efforts of the Barbados Police Service in securing the prosecution of the alleged child trafficker. This demonstrates that our border security system works and that Barbados will not relax in our efforts to maintain the integrity of our borders or in our efforts to dampen the scourge of international human trafficking. The matter is now before the courts and I am confident that the thorough investigation of this particular matter sends a strong signal that Barbados' border security is strong and efficient."

Nicholls said Government just recently took the Advanced Passenger Information and Passenger Name Record Bill to Parliament which was passed in both Houses to further secure this country's borders and enhance its immigration enforcement capabilities.

He added: "The new Immigration Bill which will come up in Parliament next month will also provide the basis to broaden the measures designed to counteract the effects of the evolving landscape of international criminal activity and give our immigration officers further scope to enforce our laws and protect our borders."

Barbados cannot claim any victimhood in this total disaster, and just for the record, neither can Afrika, as they had ample warning to reel in the bajan blabber and shut her down in their jurisdiction, but they declined to act, so the enabler role is well defined. The outcome from this was never going to be rosy. How does one actively pursue reparations. Then, as though invisible to everyone else, perform the very same criminal activities that requires reparatory justice?

How does any of that correlate to good governance, or even make any sense? The red flags started when the bajan whirlwind was opening embassies left and right on the continent. Their track record for such is one of only corrupt practices in the west. We therefore knew there were not going to be any significant changes made to operations regardless of destinations. We can truthfully say Afrika brought all this western exposure, and further embarrassment on itself, by invitation, and was willingly led down the garden path to slavery death and destrution, by a well known chronic, pathological liar.

The big talker had to shamelessly show us just how much bogus celebrity and fake power it had, and could wield in engineering this cockup; that has now taken on a whole life of its own. We are now left to witness the fallout from the entire episode that was avoidable, had there been any principled adults in either parliament who were not focused only on their status and positions of soft power, now further reduced by blindness to the natural order of things.

There is never honoring commitments made to populations, no matter how many lifetimes they occupy parliaments, elections rigged, the number of mandates given, or manifestos written which are immediately cast aside upon winning. Therefore only the dimmest wits would care what happens to governments who have absolutely no loyalty to them in return, and prove it daily. Electorates now need to take stock of what is more important. Either parading, peacock swollen politicians or their own lives, safety and that of families. I see a no-brainer, but others may still see their own demise dressed up as survival. Amen Ra
