The Dire Need For Political Upgrades, Upward Mobility, Accountability
Before A UN Debut Can Occur
By Empress Wuraola Oya

To date, no local politician has ever demonstrated they met or surpassed a threshold of intelligence to successfully navigate and conquer; by doing what is necessary to free the islands from rigorous geopolitical constraints in the last 70 years. How then could either continent fantasize about assuming control over the levers of global power, is a mystery. Particularly when basic domestic chores of maintenance as it relates to financial, social, infrastructural discipline, and upward mobility for inhabitants eludes them, as inventions designed to fail populations generationally.

It is worth mentioning that is what they mostly excel at, should take a bow, and first prize. One would think they knew nothing can happen unless progress is seen to have occurred before, and not after such lofty day dreams and hyped up ambitions are presented to the world. The leaders of yesteryear possessing such rare skillsets wrote books that no one bothers to use as guides. The newer ones only embark on a journey to return to the same frozen positions.

With no evidence they are credible, or properly qualified to take charge of large swaths of demographics while making crucial decisions, or would not resort to what they have become so accustomed to, in terms of mediocre performances. So far, output has been poor, especially while under immense pressure to not change course. The protracted propensity to bend, agree privately, and break is not a formidable show or sign of inner strength.

Where other UN members exhibit a determination to not fold to anything that weakens resolve, attacks, or threatens established philosophies. Smaller states, and the Global South have not yet expertly maneuvered through or learned the intricacies put in place for maximum outcomes, within a millennia-old power structure. Therefore, are incapable of taking command of grander events, outside of their still to be fixed spheres.

The Dire Need For Political Upgrades, Upward Mobility, Accountability Before A UN Debut Can Occur

No one will allow those track records to enter the international arena as qualified failures, too much is at stake, as many billions of people will be negatively impacted, once there are no significant upgrades seen. While everyone is well aware industrialized countries must answer to voters, even if it escapes political dreamers, that is the reality. Unlike regional and strangled Afrikan countries who bold facedly ignore the people's concerns without care. The underachiever rate is sure to follow all into the UN space where it is less needed, therefore must convert to acceptable levels beforehand.

Since no one ever bothered to sufficiently police them or clamp down on shenanigans protected by dangerously escalating egos, local laws and what is perceived as complete diplomatic cover. Even with heightened, recognized limitations erected as barriers like the Economic Hitman exploits from the 1970s that lasted at least 50 years and still firmly in place. Until one of the devisers are now speaking out against the misuse of his creation. The problem remains, the politically inclined, wholeheartedly believe in adopting the negatives to practice on psychologically paralyzed populations as mimics, and are yet to invent anything original or positive to contribute toward forward movement. Then there are the added misguiding productions to hide the fact they are merely puppets in place fooling everyone with tiring, overused prima donna recitals.

Still, not enough brain power was available or employed to safely circumvent the unbroken, ongoing devastation. Instead, the culprits joined in and proceeded to wreak their own brand of further havoc on disabled, helpless societies for too many decades than are mentally healthy. All of which could have been avoided had they not surrounded themselves with yes men and women who, once their salaries, status, pensions are secured, would agree to any and all mayhem against electorates. In order to avoid being fired for doing right by the populace who hired them, and fully utilized, encouraged by upper island management. Every detail of those episodes normalized by all and inexplicably admired ensuring no alterations or transition to do the best ever happens. These are the fallout out from miscalculations, and are irreversible in in the long term. Which could have a shelf life expanding into another seventy years, had they not all gotten overly industrious thinking it is their turn to take charge of the international narrative. Without any modifications to the disaster they too instituted in every crevice of the parliaments and in societies for an overly lengthy period. Never recognizing the stumbling blocks built up for themselves for the entire duration. The realization is yet to set in what they have done to wrap themselves in a cocoon of make believe.

We now have receipts for what happened on the continent, but none of it absolves governments for their willing participation in wholesale destruction. Including not properly educating the masses for better expectations, as it pertains to the underlying base and frameworks for electrical power and water systems. The same applies to the Caribbean to a lesser extent because of population size, land mass, and some infrastructure built pre and post independence that is distinctly different in the area of personal/public health, hygiene, but mostly neglected since. Resulting in the same outcomes as the degradation accelerates, and those responsible for overseeing enhancements still running around in circles, and are yet to deliver sounder.

Those most vocal about UN chairs and seats walked each other into political fantasies, now shredded, and are stuck since none of it was thoroughly thought out for ramifications due to continuous non-action in respective jurisdictions. The UN needs to take charge of the current situation and going forward demand annual report cards from offending countries who seek to represent at the global level, but inadequate domestically. They all know what they have been doing to help stagnate upgrades and real development in individual countries. Therefore, outlining improvements and accomplishment made to current decadent infrastructures in every autonomy across both continents each year for at least a decade in duration is a must.

Then present results to the UN body before consideration is given for potential seats within global power structures, including other newer systems. That is the first step toward a massive cleanup process now unavoidable and expected. As things stand, none believe they are answerable to taxpayers, and offer no explanations, accurate fiscal reporting or anything even remotely associated with accountability. Where avoidance by any means has become systemic and part of the problem never the solution. While things worsen, and they assign blame to everyone else but themselves.

The Realities We Must Face About Afrika Before Better Is Introduced

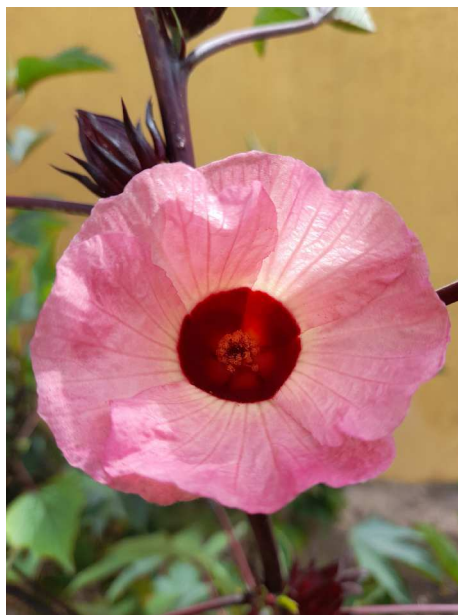

It is humbling to note that Black Americans are still trying to educate Afrikans about who they are and the true Story surrounding who is in the Americas, and how everything played out. How they got here, and the reason no three descent's experiences are exactly alike. Neither should they be blended so that the political element from this region can run off with their latest money making gifts. While feeling secure and untouchable, as everyone watches them in dismay. Which will ultimately lead to nowhere for Afrikan descents again, just like everything else with a political touch.

Given how opportunities are severely limited on the continent, we get how these things can happen within populations numbered in the millions, a form of survival, when nothing else is available. Although it is noted public servants have not done nearly enough to stem that tide, train the people accordingly through programs, or supply alternative means of existence. Therefore Afrikans have developed a reputation. Once it hit news platforms internationally, like this has in the US, there will be no more turning back. The stories are numerous and a reason to avoid certain countries in Afrika, until something is done to reverse the dangers that exist, as a trend.

The Realities We Must Face About Afrika Before Better Is Introduced

Some, who now question how Black cousins operate, must accept that due to centuries of separation, stolen cultures were redefined, with new ones added and developed. Most people saw the pitfalls of trying to assimilate into the abnormal, and the consequences derived. In that interim, the truth finally hit home with wind force. Many found their rightful space as meant to happen. Unfortunately, not everyone was in place to receive, but most people also rejected the natural course, and still prefer comfort zones where there is no light, and only darkness leaks out from political mouths:

It is unfortunate that hundreds of millions on both continents lost their genetic memories of who they are and some are lashing out in frustration. Although the ability to reclaim exists, and should take precedence to retrieve. Knowing not that they know not, even after reaching university and college level matriculation, reflects badly on research skills. However, it helps us examine the depths to which everything was hidden. A large part of the problem causing immense divisions between groups today. The leaders are certainly not helping with the narrow agendas of exclusivity, and one-track mindsets of only seeking out voters, supporters, adoring fans, for the next election, the extent of non-existent enlightenment. While never believing that widespread education works out superbly, since they too are intellectually stagnated, products of a system.

I too published over the years on the esteemed scholars who researched for up to 80 years in these times, some did so from as far back as the 18th century and coming forward. The most recent ones did their due diligence well into senior years, are now ancestors, and what they found with irrefutable evidence is documented in books, videos, magazines, etc. I personally know of people with internet access for the last twenty years and wasted every second, never sought the available knowledge. Refused to load up on necessary information to inform the masses. They made it a point to keep a small cross section lacking. Where they are basically trapped within confused minds and unable to get out. While only fed a steady diet of political claptrap, that insults Black intelligence and the still concealed excellence.

The Realities We Must Face About Afrika Before Better Is Introduced

With so much data easily available and at our fingertips, as opposed to what confronted our most recent ancestors in the Caribbean. Even our still alive parents who know nothing about their true identities, will leave the earth in the same condition due to deteriorating mental states, age etc, too late to catch up now.

There is absolutely no justifiable excuse for such deficit in comprehension coming from young people anywhere today, especially living in the US and boast they study this, that and the next, including Afrikan history, yet remain clueless:

Then there are those Afrikans showing an even lower form of black-on-black hatred, for seemingly no valid reason. Black Americans have become exhausted from the boring behavior, and doing something to end the nightmare. Which we never knew existed in such large proportions, coming from some Afrikans, outside of what we have been exposed to in the west. This is highly disturbing, and although the outspoken ones have paid the price through job loss, etc, for this openly disrespectful, violent conduct toward Black Americans on social media: nevertheless the anger still persists. We can already guess this outcome once there is follow up, which always happens in the US. Unfortunately for this person, nothing like this can be overlooked since the determination to do harm is very clear. It has become too widespread, prevalently unprofessional, and dangerously unreasonable:

This metal mask was used during slavery for 3 main reasons.

- 1) To prevent the slaves from eating fruits such as apples, pineapples, oranges, cashews, bananas, plantains and sugarcane etc while harvesting them, yet they were made to work consistently in all the plantation farms.
- 2) To stop the slaves from chanting our African spiritual songs. Not only that those our spiritual and war songs affected the slave masters, it also motivated some slaves to rebel and fight back not minding losing their lives.
- 3) To stop slaves from teaching our African local dialects (languages) to their children...whereby destroyed our dialects, and forced them to learn foreign languages.

Last but not the least, to starve slaves as a punishment in the slave camps. The mask prevented them from eating or drinking. Sometimes the slave masters would force an apple (a whole) into the mouths of slaves before they wore the metal mask on them with the padlocks so that they couldn't talk.

PUBLIC SERVICE NOTICE

The Barbados Power Company need to pay attention to these power lines that are hanging way too low in the Elizabeth Park, Christ Church area. Any tall vehicle not noticing them can pull down the entire load causing hours of lost electricity in the community.

When sanitation trucks that are extremely elevated come through weekly, workers have to use objects to remove the lines. Which is also dangerous to them as connecting to unseen live wires can cause severe injury.
